Introduction

At 10:13 p.m. on Good Friday, April 14, 1865, while attending a play at Ford’s Theatre in Washington DC, President Abraham Lincoln was shot in the back of the head by John Wilkes Booth. Lincoln, unconscious and bleeding, was rushed across the street to a nearby house. Though doctors tended to Lincoln throughout the night, his wound proved fatal. The “Great Emancipator” died at 7:22 a.m. on April 15.

The assassination of Lincoln was part of a wider plot that included the deaths of the vice president and the secretary of state. The man who intended to kill Andrew Johnson did not go through with the plan, but Lewis Powell got into William Seward’s home and slashed his face before escaping.

This letter from Colonel John B. Stonehouse to his son, Johnny, captures the turmoil in Washington DC as news of the attacks spread across the city. Stonehouse was staying at the Ebbitt House, a hotel near Seward’s home and the White House.

Excerpt

Just as I was going to bed a man ran in breathless and pale enquiring which of the Theatres the President was attending – ‘he said he must find him at once as M’f. Seward had been murdered in his bed – We followed him to the door and there met people rushing from the Theatre saying the “President is shot, “the President is murdered” such a time I never before beheld and never want to again

At first no one seemed to believe it but it soon became certain that it was all true

Just as I got to Fords Theatre they were carrying the President to a house across the street. he did not move or speak after he was shot –

Questions for Discussion

Read the introduction and study Colonel John Stonehouse’s letter. Then apply your knowledge of American history and evidence from the letter to answer the following questions:

1. According to John Stonehouse, how was Washington DC affected by the surrender of Robert E. Lee?
2. What is the tone of the excerpt describing the night of April 19, 1865? How is the tone of this section different from that of the sections before and after it?
3. What specific details of the Lincoln assassination does Stonehouse provide? What do we learn about the attempt on Seward’s life?

Dear Johnny

Since I have been here this time the most exciting times that this Country ever saw have taken place

Thursday evening Washington was crazy with joy over the surrender of Lee. every one of the Public Buildings was illuminated, and every private house was blazing with candles from top to bottom. the people were wild with excitement. Men women & children were all out of doors.

The next evening a grand performance was advertised to be given at Fords Theatre and it was announced that the President & ladies and Genl Grant and wife were to be present.

Just as I was going to bed a man ran in breathless and pale enquiring which of the Theatres the President was attending – ‘he said he must find him at once as M’ Seward had been murdered in his bed – We followed him to the door and there met people rushing from the Theatre saying the “President is shot, “the President is murdered” such a time I never before beheld and never want to again

At first no one seemed to believe it but it soon became certain that it was all true

Just as I got to Fords Theatre they were carrying the President to a house across the street. he did not move or speak after he was shot –

You have seen in the papers a full account of it I have no doubt

I was at Secretary Sewards house several [4] times yesterday. I saw the knife the assassin stabbed M’. Seward with and the Pistol with [struck: wich] which he broke M’ Frederick Sews dull there is blood and hair sticking to it still neither of the men have as yet been caught

I am as well as usual & glad to hear you are the same. I have been instructed to remain here until further orders – Love to Mamma Matey and yourself

Your Affectionate father
